Bringing the World to the Classroom

From the Leadership

Schools and educators today are preparing children to enter a world that we cannot fully imagine. In fifteen years, there will be new jobs, new forms of technology and new ways in which we can communicate with one another. The jobs that currently exist will disappear, as more and more mundane tasks become automated. Schools must, therefore, prepare students who are creative and can problem-solve effectively. They need to be able to cooperate and collaborate with people from diverse cultures, with different perspectives and points of view so that they are able to stay on top in a competitive world. Finally, yet importantly, they need to form empathy and sensitivity to the environment and grow up to be responsible human beings who ensure preservation of Earth for all future generations. This is where Sadhbhavana World School is trying to make the change.

The team takes pride in its research-orientated approach and strives to be a learning organization that pioneers positive changes in the way children are educated. At Sadhbhavana, children are not simply being prepared for academic rigour, rather for life itself by focusing on 21st century skills and social responsibility. At the same time, Sadhbhavana allows children to be children, giving them the time and space to enjoy the particular pleasures of each age while balancing the responsibility to keep its vision firmly fixed on preparing them to navigate the world they will inhabit as adults.

Sadhbhavana delivers the curriculum based on the principle that learning must be exciting and stimulating, personalized and reflective.
